The Story of the Review

In October 2016, the First Minister made a commitment to figure out how Scotland could love its most vulnerable children and give them the childhood they deserve. She commissioned the Independent Care Review and, since February 2017 when Fiona Duncan was appointed as Chair, the Care Review has been figuring out how to keep that Promise.

The Care Review has listened very carefully to those with experience of living and working in and around the 'care system' to properly understand what needs to change.

The Care Review heard over 5,500 experiences. Over half were children, young people and adults who had lived in care. The rest were families and the paid and unpaid workforce.

It was their stories that guided the Care Review and their experiences have shaped everything the Care Review has concluded.

As well as listening carefully to what matters to children, the Care Review considered the research on the 'care system' and commissioned its own research to fill knowledge gaps. It reviewed all of the laws and rules, collected data, and made connections across the 'roots and branches' of the 'care system'.

The Care Review started with Orientation where a plan was developed to create a well-organised, thoughtful Care Review that children, young people and adults with care experience would want to be part of and that offered lots of choices and opportunities for them to be involved.

Work began to find and understand the numbers and facts known about care experienced infants, children and young people and all the words, rules and regulations that affect them.

Organisations and charities who work with children, young adults and families were asked by the Care Review to get involved to support the work.

The focus of the Discovery stage was to identify a vision for Scotland's future and map out the 'roots and branches' of the 'care system' based on how it feels to live and work in it. A Discovery Group was appointed to oversee this and their thoughtful and diligent work produced twelve 'intentions'. These were peer reviewed by the care community and every single one was refined and improved.

The intentions guided the work of the rest of the Care Review, the Journey.

It was clear that children could not wait for change. So from May 2018 the Stop:Go team worked closely with the people in charge of the 'care system' to help them change the things that were having the biggest impact on children's lives.

Between May 2018 and December 2019 a Journey Group steered ten work groups made up of over 150 expert volunteers to look carefully into what matters most to children and had the biggest impact on their lives. In all of these groups over half of the experts knew the 'care system' through their personal experience.

Fiona planned the Care Review, and chaired the Discovery Group and the Journey Group. She met lots of children, young adults, families and members of the paid and unpaid workforce across Scotland.

thank you

The Care Review owes a huge debt of thanks to an army of thousands

All of the volunteers who took part in the groups, gave their time, their professional expertise, their stories and experiences.

The secretariat team and all the researchers who gave their time, energy, commitment.

CELCIS and Strathclyde University for supporting the Care Review, and to the Corra Foundation for allowing Fiona to work part time whilst she was the Chair.

Thank you to the group of grant making foundations and philanthropists who have tracked the progress of the Care Review in order to think about how they could support The Plan.

A special thank you to Who Cares? Scotland, whose award winning 1000 Voices campaign was the catalyst for the Care Review, for supporting their 1000 Voices team to work so hard for the Care Review.

The biggest thank you goes to everyone who generously shared their story, often recounting the most traumatic incidences of their lives, in the knowledge that it would not change their experience but could change the future.

The best way to repay those 5,500 people is by honouring their experiences and making the change they ask for by keeping The Promise.
